

I would like to see the broadcast ownership rules remain unchanged. We already have a very biased media and if all stations are owned by the same corporation you will only get one opinion. The media is the most powerful in public opinion and information. It is where the general public gets informed on current events. But if you only have one company, you only have one opinion. I would much rather have a variety of positions on any subject than just one position on a subject. It should not be that whoever has the most money can dominate what is news worthy and what is not. To have such a huge media conglomerate owned by only a handful of people is a dangerous thing. Fox does not need to own multiple national television stations.
